Dear BLM,

As far as the Normally Pressured Lands project goes I think that they should just be able to drill. Some of my concerns that I think should be accounted for before drilling starts, are that the air quality, especially in the winter, is not impacted by all the activity because winter after winter of super high ozone would not be good. Also, I think that the surface disturbance should not dramatically affect wildlife such as the sage grouse because they are an important part of the environment. Other than that, drill baby drill.

Sincerely,
