Dear Bureau of Land Management,

You're headed in the wrong direction, and if you go through selling off ANWR to gas companies, you'll realize your mistake far too late. It's easy to not care about ecological consequences when they're so far from you, but Secretary Zinke, it's precisely your job to have a deeper understanding of the complex interactions of trophic webs, and the cascading effects of land use decisions made within the borders of the United States. To be frank, being a geologist isn't enough. No one's sole expertise is enough for this issue. Put aside your own interests, and consider the duties of the position you fill. Seek knowledge and input from other fields, and other experts, to make an appropriate decision. Lastly, do not be motivated by greed, for making decisions like this out of a personal interest are the kind you'll lose sleep over when the consequences start to appear. You're in a very powerful position, Mr. Zinke. Do not be rash or single-minded about a decision where your actions cannot be undone nor fixed.

Sincerely,

Jessica Gorzo
