Shocking that once again I must add my voice to those objecting to the possibility of oil exploration in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR).

No new factors support such an intrusion to a landscape set aside for its exceptional value for undisturbed wildlife. Called by some a Crown Jewel, the ANWR must not be degraded by those certain aspects of oil exploration, noise, roads, pollution.

We do not need the oil, prices do not justify this risky course, and the claims of income to the US Treasury are without historical precedent therefore exaggerated.

I whole heartedly reject the proposition as unjustified on all fronts.
