To whom it may concern,

As one of the last and largest pristine wilderness areas in the United States, the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge should remain closed in its entirety to any resource extraction. The cost and the unknowns of drilling in such a remote area, for oil that will certainly be gone within a generation (and only lengthen our dependency on fossil fuels when we need to put money/research into alternatives), and we will spoiled America's last great wilderness. We can develop new sources of energy - we cannot develop pristine wilderness.
