Refuges are just that,refuges. Not an industrial sacrifice zone. Perhaps the refuge safety zone could be violated in case of national emergency;that's clearly not the case here. And to violate the refuge to further the fossil fuel(fool?) agenda is almost sac religious. If we as a species are unable to reserve some areas as sacred and inviolate,then we're losing our claim to be the crown of creation. It's a holy obligation to preserve this world for future generations and for the creator who entrusted this sacred sphere to us. All this misguided effort should be directed toward a renewable energy future that benefits all living creatures. Global warming is an existential threat to life on earth,and it's happening faster in the arctic than anywhere else. This activity will only exacerbate the problem. Let's put a stop to this foolishness right now!
