Alaska Senator Lisa Murkowski, Pres. Trump, and the fossil fuel industries are trying to expedite permits and regulations that will allow drilling for oil and gas on the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge that we do not need. At present, there is a glut of these fossil fuels in the U.S.

Drilling in the fragile Arctic National Refuge would cause damage to the surrounding environment due to the numerous roads and structures that would need to be built. Spills, even small ones, will cause damage. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service reached this conclusion after a study in 2015. Other agencies and scientists agree with their conclusion.

The refuge is a national treasure that must not be laid to waste.
