The people of the United States want ANWR protected. We love the wildlife, the beauty, and the unspoiled wilderness. We should keep it that way, as the caribou, polar bears, and other wildlife depend on that area for survival in an increasingly developed world. Drilling and pipelines would ruin the area, and it cannot be returned to the pristine shape it is in. Heaven forbid there is an oil leak, because oil companies have shown how little they can do to prevent lasting damage to sensitive habitats. Look what happened with the Deepwater Horizon, or the Exxon Valdez leak. And a leak in an Arctic environment would be especially damaging. Oil companies can't fix it when there is a problem, they don't have the technology or the foresight to return a fragile ecosystem back after it is damaged by spills. They have proven that over and over again. We don't need the oil and will probably destroy the Refuge so oil companies can make profits by selling oil to other countries. It is shortsighted to drill for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.
