To Whom It May Concern:

It is a travesty that drilling is being considered in this area once again. The US has become an oil exporter, so the excuse of national security is hollow. The fragility of this area, and the uniqueness of the species represented, should cause a rational agency to reconsider. There places cannot be restored if there is an accidental spill. And the logistics of cleaning up a spill seem almost insurmountable in the harsh Arctic.

Our focus should be on developing renewable resources that will keep the planet healthy and habitable for future generations. Please save this precious resource just as it is!
