The Alaskan National Wildlife Refuge is a pristine wilderness that has been protected from exploitation and the potential for a major environmental disaster for decades. Through bipartisan efforts, it has remained a rich and unspoiled wild place, free from the threat of industrial development, road building, and the inevitable leaks and devastating spills of crude oil into this most delicate and vibrant ecosystem. Should the oil extraction of this vast untouched wilderness be approved by the current administration, and drilling were to go forward, I fear the worst for the native people of the area, the good people of Alaska and mostly for the unique flora and fauna that makes this area so precious. For this reason, I am writing to make sure you count my voice as one that is strongly opposed to this foolhardy, unnecessary and potentially devastating proposal.

Sincerely,
Christopher Dekker
