Dear Bureau of Land Managment,

The future jobs for my kids and grandkids should not depend on oil and gas, which are a finite resource that pollute the air. Leave that carbon where it is.

All the money that would cost to develop an oil and gas program in the arctic should be used instead for research and development of renewable sources of energy. THAT is where the future is, without using the resources that belong to the generations that are to come. The jobs of the future are tied to renewable energy, and NOT to the dinosaurs and plants from ages past.

Sincerely,
Maria Fernandez
