To Whom It May Concern,

I disagree strongly with the plan to open the Alaskan National Wildlife Reserve to oil and gas drilling, supported by Senator Murkowski. The coastal plain is the home and breeding ground of many wildlife species including caribou, bears, wolves, and migratory birds. Not only would there be a risk of leaks, contaminating the reserve, but it would divide the land, interfering with migration and breeding. You must also give consideration to the Native American Tribes who reside and hunt on this land. The reserve is one of the last wilderness regions that can be enjoyed by current and future generations. As a wildlife advocate and hiker, I believe in the preservation of wilderness regions.

Sincerely,

Gail Landy
