North Cascade National Park was established in 1968, the 32nd park among America's 59 National Parks. Located in northern Washington State. It's a vast wilderness of conifer-clad mountains, glaciers and lakes. The park is often referred to as the American Alps because the mountain peaks are snow covered. The park's tallest mountain, Mount Rainier, is 14,411 feet tall.

We should be protecting the Arctic Refuge, not allowing drilling. It is a national treasure and should be preserved for future generations.
