Re: Exploration in the ANWR

February 5, 2019

Dear Ms. Hayes:

I would like to take this moment to express my opposition to any industrial development in the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge.

The potential for environmental damage is obvious to any thinking person. The damaging effects of climate change are well established by the scientific community and the contribution to climate change by our using carbon based energy sources is equally well established. Searching for and developing energy sources in the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge can only contribute to climate change and is immoral.

The ANWR left in it's natural state is a not only a resource, it is an example of the human ability to leave portions of our earth unmolested and the recognition that unmolested areas of our frontiers make a priceless contribution to the well being of the human race. What the Trump Administration and all authorities promoting energy development in the ANWR are suggesting is a molestation in the worst sense of the word.

Those who propose energy development in ANWR are bullies and molesters that stand to benefit personally at the expense of the health and well-being of the earth in it's entirety.

Stay out of ANWR!

Sincerely,

Garth Henry
